9	 From Kate Randall To David Randall, Peter Randall Subject Dad Hi Dave and Pete, Do you realise it's Dad's 50th birthday on the 31st? He knows you can't be here, but he's very disappointed. Me too. I can't believe that the last time we were all together was for Christmas in 2019 – before you both got jobs abroad. But... why don't we get together by Zoom! I'll be at Mum and Dad's house on the 31st and if I organise a meeting at 7 pm London time – that's 2 pm for you Dave and 8 pm for you Pete – can you be free? It'll be a wonderful surprise for Dad. By the way, I wanted to buy him some new golf clubs for his birthday, but I didn't because they cost a lot (see the link), so why don't we buy them together – a present from the three of us? Let me know if you agree. goodukgolfing.com/setofclubs Your loving sister, Kate Kate	lives near Dave and Pete has got two brothers ✓ doesn't live in England is writing to her parents

A mistake that made a million

Pattie Barnes is one of about a dozen teenage millionaires in Britain. Almost all the others became rich through the internet but Pattie makes her money from her chocolate cookies. You can buy them in nearly every supermarket in Britain. “It all happened by accident,” says Pattie.

“One Sunday last year, I was a bit bored and I decided to make some chocolate cookies. I often made them and I always used the same recipe – I got it from my grandma. But this particular day, while I was making them, I was also talking to my boyfriend on the phone, and I made a mistake. When I realised, at first I wanted to start again but I didn't have enough chocolate, so I thought, 'perhaps they'll be OK,' and I put them in the oven. And, when I tasted one... it was absolutely delicious! My friends agreed and... well, that's how it all started. I left school and, with my parents' help, I started a business.” What was the mistake? “That's a secret,” says Pattie.

What do you know about Pattie?

- She is younger than all the other millionaires in Britain.
- She only sells her cookies on the internet.
- Not all supermarkets sell her cookies. ✓
- She is the only teenage millionaire in Britain.
