Hello Emma – or perhaps I should say Amelia (?),

I expect you're surprised to get an email from me. After all, we haven't been in touch for ages. The last news I had was in the email you sent five years ago, before you went to the USA – so I'm hoping you still use this address, even though you've changed your name. I follow your career on social media, naturally, but it's not the same as getting personal news, is it?

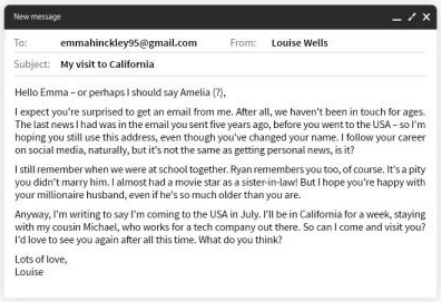

I still remember when we were at school together. Ryan remembers you too, of course. It's a pity you didn't marry him. I almost had a movie star as a sister-in-law! But I hope you're happy with your millionaire husband, even if he's so much older than you are.

Anyway, I'm writing to say I'm coming to the USA in July. I'll be in California for a week, staying with my cousin Michael, who works for a tech company out there. So can I come and visit you? I'd love to see you again after all this time. What do you think?

A TECHNOLOGICAL MARVEL!

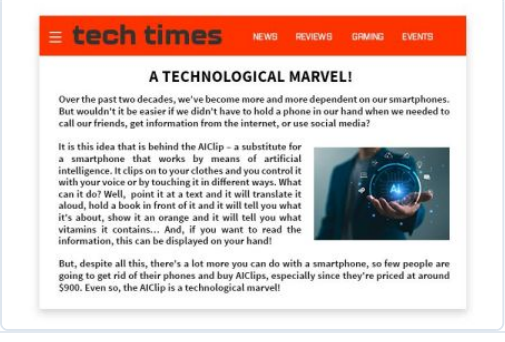

Over the past two decades, we've become more and more dependent on our smartphones. But wouldn't it be easier if we didn't have to hold a phone in our hand when we needed to call our friends, get information from the internet, or use social media?

It is this idea that is behind the AIClip – a substitute for a smartphone that works by means of artificial intelligence. It clips on to your clothes and you control it with your voice or by touching it in different ways. What can it do? Well, point it at a text and it will translate it aloud, hold a book in front of it and it will tell you what it's about, show it an orange and it will tell you what vitamins it contains... And, if you want to read the information, this can be displayed on your hand!

But, despite all this, there's a lot more you can do with a smartphone, so few people are going to get rid of their phones and buy AIClips, especially since they're priced at around $900. Even so, the AIClip is a technological marvel!
