Subject	Summer in London

Hi Liz,
I know you and John are coming to London with your children this summer, so perhaps you can help us with a problem. We're going away from the 2nd to 16th of July and we can't take our two cats with us. We've asked our neighbours if they can look after them but they're going on holiday too. So, if you haven't booked your hotel yet, why not stay in our house? What do you think?

Jack and Marjorie Franklyn are well known in our town for their delicious bread. So it will be a sad day next Saturday when they open their shop for the last time. "We've been very happy here," said Jack, "but both of us are over seventy years old now and it's hard work. Also, since the hypermarket opened last year, only a mile away, we've lost a few customers. People want low prices. It's only natural." The Franklyns are going to sell the shop and buy a cottage near their son and daughter-in-law on the south coast.

This is an article from a local newspaper. What is the subject?

A bakery has closed.

A hypermarket has just opened.

A new shop is going to open next Saturday.
