The whole place could do with a makeover: everything looked old, worn and a little dirty (including the staff!). As for the restaurant, the food was OK but pretty boring. The worst thing was that, after dinner, there was nothing to do: no English channels on the TV and no nightlife – the nearest village had only two tiny cafés and a few shops, and everything closed at 10 pm!

The location was ideal for long country walks but not as peaceful as I would have liked, because of the renovation work that was going on and which wasn't mentioned on the website. However, my room was bright and clean and the food was good, if rather plain. The staff were pleasant and helpful, although some were very young and lacked experience.
